

A FUTURE FOR CONSUMER CO-OPERATION

IN BRITAIN?

THE DEBATE CONTINUES

The question, and the answers, in the last Bulletin have drawn considerable interest and the wide measure of agreement, at least in diagnosis, among these articles has been supported by much of the correspondence we have received. To help in the debate, and the action to which it should lead, we publish an article by Alan Sinclair which was received after the deadline for Bulletin 46 and shorter pieces from two chief executive officers of Co-operative societies, F.L. Round and Kenneth N. Scott.
